World's First: 3-a-side 'All Weather' Ping Pong Table Installed at Parliament Hill, Hampstead Heath on 20 July 2014

The world's first T3 All weather table proved to be a 3-a-side smash hit at Hampstead Heath yesterday. The table took prime position in the ping pong zone at the Give it a Go Festival, where the table is now available for the public to use indefinitely.

To kick start the afternoon, the Mayor of Camden cut the ribbon to reveal the table to the crowds, which promptly proceeded with a 3-a-side game between the Mayor of Camden, T3's Founder Digi Berry and six Great British table tennis champions.

Hewley Griffith, T3's official coach and former Guyanese number one said

"The future is bright for T3, this game allows up to twelve players to play at a time, what better way to get people active and experience a new take on a classic."

Designed and manufactured in the UK, the whole range of T3 table tennis tables were available for guests to experience, from the T3 SuperMini to the T3 Tournament and what a success they were, with crowds gathering around each table in a bid to test the fun, fast revolutionary game.

T3 Founder Digi Berry said:

'I am delighted that the City of London has commissioned the T3 All weather to be here at Hampstead Heath in London, free for the public to experience this fantastically addictive game.'

History of Ping Pong

Ping Pong or Wiff Waff originated in England in the 1880s, when it was played as a post-dinner party game on the dining tables of the upper classes. The sound generated in play gave the game its first name of “wiff-waff”. In 1901 Hamley’s of Regent Street, then a sports manufacturer, were the first to make a bespoke wiff waff racket. The sound created by these hard bats gave the game name its next name “Ping Pong”

With social play clearly on the rise, T3 Ping Pong brings a new energy and excitement for all to enjoy – it’s time to get round the table!
